despite the official end of the civil war in korea the north and the south sections of the country remain technically at war roy grinker argues that the continued conflict between north and south korea and the prospects for peace on the korean peninsula must be understood within the broader social and cultural contexts in which koreans live he suggests that a fundamental obstacle to peace on the peninsula is that south korea has become a nation in which nearly all aspects of economic political and cultural identity are defined in opposition to north korea he further demonstrates that in spite of its status as a sacred goal for all koreans the idea of unification threatens the world in which almost every south korean has been born and raised in chapters on defectors divided families student protests and early education grinker reveals how south korean conceptions of unification prevent either side from recognizing that a unified korea must also be a diverse korea

the debate in south korea over the government s engagement policy toward north korea the so called sunshine policy did not start with pyongyang s recent admission that it has been secretly pursuing a nuclear weapons program in violation of multiple international commitments but the evolution of the debate will be an important determinant of how the south korean and broader international response to this latest north korean challenge ultimately ends this report provides a framework for viewing south korean responses to this challenge it examines the south korean debate over policies toward the north analyzes the sources of controversy and assesses the debate s implications for south korea and the united states the report finds that much of the public debate is a product of differences among south koreans over the changes kim dae jung made in south korea s long existing policy after becoming president in 1998 rather than over the need for some kind of engagement with north korea per se while partisan politics are a component of the debate at its core are some big questions what should be the aim of any effort to achieve greater association with north korea reconciliation on the basis of korea being one people or unification by extending south korea s democratic free market system to the north what role should reciprocity play in this effort what should be the nature and scale of south korean assistance to north korea how should political efforts to engage north korea be balanced against south korea s security and other important interests how should the effectiveness of the government s policies be evaluated
